ABOUT

Performing the World

Performing the World (PTW) is a global community of hundreds of “performance activists” who explore the power of performance and play to create a better world. The PTW community creatively engages social problems, educates, heals and activates others, to bring new social-cultural-psychological and political possibilities into existence.

A project of the East Side Institute and All Stars Project, the biennial Performing the World Conference in New York — the first in 2001 — has been a gathering place to explore and celebrate performance as a catalyst for human and community development and culture change.
