Sessions and Tracks

Innate immunity

Innate immune responses are not specific to a particular pathogen or non-self-ingredient in the way that the adaptive immune responses are. They depend on a group of proteins and phagocytic cells that recognize conserved features of pathogens and become quickly activated to help destroy invaders. The innate immune system is essentially made up of barriers that aim to keep viruses, bacteria, parasites, and other foreign particles out of your body or limit their ability to spread and move throughout the body.

Regulation of T/B cell responses

For immunomodulation and suppression of immune responses it needs regulation of immune cells. As Aberrant T/B cell responses developed wide range of diseases, including asthma and allergy and autoimmune diseases and many immunological disorders as T/B cells are the main route of the immune response and its very important to regulate their function by different mechanism .

Adaptive immunity

The adaptive immune system, also known as the acquired immune response which is more specific immune response than the innate immune response. Adaptive immune response is composed of highly specialized, systemic cells and processes that eliminate or prevent pathogen growth. It having ability to recognize specific pathogens more efficiently which creates immunological memory after an initial response to a specific pathogen and lead to an enhanced response to subsequent encounters with that same pathogen.

Infectious Diseases and Immune System

Infectious diseases are disorders caused by organisms such as bacteria, viruses, fungi or parasites and immune system recognise them as non-self-antigen and produce immune response against them to protect our host cell from harmful infections.

Clinical immunology

Clinical immunology is the study of diseases caused by disorders of the immune system. It also involves diseases of other systems, where immune reactions play a part in the pathology and clinical features of immune response. In the Clinical immunology the molecular and cellular bases of immunological disease mostly studied.

Cellular Immunology

www.nyeventslist.com

Cellular Immunology is a broad area of in vitro and in vivo studies of cellular immune responses in the immune system. In the Cellular Immunology mostly study the mechanisms that regulate innate and adaptive functions of dendritic cells (DCs) during priming of T cells immunity on the cellular level.

Regional Immunology

Regional Immunology offers a new approach to communication in the field of immunology. The stated purpose of the journal is "to provide a focus for the judicious dissemination of results of experimental studies of immune activities as they are induced, expressed, and regulated in different regions of the body.

Transplantation Immunology

Transplantation is the act of transferring cells, tissues, or organs from one site to another in the living body. Most of the kidney, liver, heart, lung, or pancreas main organs transplant from a donor to recipient. But the immune system is the most formidable barrier to transplantation as a treatment. The immune system is developed very specifically and effectively to recognise foreign agents and self-antigen of the body, and this mechanisms are also involved in the rejection of transplanted organs of the body and reject the transplantation.

Viral Immunology & Infection control

Viral Immunology delivers cutting-edge peer-reviewed research on emerging, rare, and understudied viruses, with special focus on analyzing mutual relationships between external viruses and internal immunity. Active immunization involves administering a virus preparation that stimulates the body's immune system to produce its own specific immunity against virus.

Immunopathology and Immunodeficiencies

The Immunopathology and Immunodeficiencies is innate and acquired immunity, passive and active immunization and immunopathologies, such as hypersensitivity reactions, autoimmunity and immunodeficiency and all disorders which cause by immune system. The Immunopathology is a branch of medicine that deals with immune responses associated with immunological disorders, and the Immunodeficiencies is immune system's ability to fight infectious disease get low or absent.

Microbial, Parasitic, and Fungal Immunology

Microbial, Parasitic, and Fungal Immunology is the study of the molecular and infection causing mechanisms used by microbes, Parasites & fungal but the Immune response show mechanism to destroy the infection as Immune system show specific immune response towards specific Infection. Microbes, Parasite, and Fungus which enters the body and triggers the development of an infection and cause damage to the host.
